Itinerary

Day 1 – Sun Sept 28

- Muskegon → Chicago (KG 5760, dep 12:05 pm, arr 11:55 am)
  - American Airlines Flagship Lounge in T3 near Gate K19
- Chicago ORD → Madrid (Iberia IB 342, dep 4:30 pm, arr Sept 29 7:55 am)

Day 2 – Mon Sept 29

- 07:55 — Arrive Madrid Barajas T4.
- 08:50–09:10 — Transfer to Chamartín (Cercanías train):
- 10:04 — Depart Chamartín (AVE 05273, Confort, seat 05B)
- 12:18 — Arrive Ourense.
- 12:32 — Depart Ourense (MD 12694)
- 13:47 — Arrive Sarria
- Check-in: Albergue O Durmiñento.
- Afternoon: explore old town.
  - Pick up pilgrim credential (credencial) at Iglesia de Santa Mariña, the Tourist Office on Rúa Maior. Monastery of La Magdalena is another option. (~€2–3 cash)
- Evening: pilgrim dinner.
  - Recommended to join a lively spot such as Mesón O Tapas do Peregrino or O Descanso for the set pilgrim menu (starter, main, dessert, wine/water). These places are popular with walkers and a good way to meet fellow pilgrims before starting the Camino.

Note

Daily Summary — Sept 29

The travel into Galicia was a bit of an adventure. My flight into Madrid was delayed, which made me miss my original train. I caught a later one, but even that got interrupted because wildfires had closed part of the tracks, so we all had to switch to a bus for the last stretch. By the time I finally made it to Sarria about 9:30 pm, I was ready to settle in. I checked into my hostel and had a pilgrim dinner with a new friend from Salamanca who arrived around the same time. The meal was classic Galician: caldo gallego, Estrella beer, and roasted pork. Galicia is famous for its rain, but so far the weather has been unexpectedly kind. I also got my pilgrim credential and my very first stamp—fittingly, at the restaurant where I ate dinner.

Days 3–7 – Sept 30 to Oct 4 (Camino Francés – last 115 km)

- Day 3 (Sept 30): Sarria → Portomarín (~22 km)

- Cross the Miño River into Portomarín, where the Church of San Nicolás was relocated stone by stone when the original town was flooded for the Belesar reservoir.
- Overnight: Pensión Albergue Gonzar

i Note

Daily Summary — Sept 30

First walking day on the Camino: Sarria to Portomarín, about 22 km. We set out before the sun because my walking partner didn't have reservations and needed to be sure to claim one of the first-come beds. The trail was wrapped in fog almost the whole morning until the sun finally burned through. Along the way we met another pilgrim from Madrid who decided to join us after overhearing Guillermo joke that the village we were passing looked like something straight out of the Resident Evil video game. We stopped for a pilgrim breakfast at Mirador da Brea, then pushed on to Portomarín.

When I got to my hostel, I did the usual Camino routine: shower, laundry in the sink, and then a much-needed nap. Later in the afternoon I wandered through the old town of Portomarín, which was rebuilt stone by stone on higher ground after a dam project flooded the original village in the 1960s. Now I'm back on the albergue patio with a café con leche, enjoying the quiet before heading out for dinner.

- Day 4 (Oct 1): Portomarín → Palas de Rei (~25 km)
  - Pass historic pilgrim hospices at Hospital de la Cruz and end in Palas de Rei, whose Church of San Tirso preserves remarkable medieval carvings.
  - Overnight: Albergue San Marcos

i Note

Daily Summary — Oct 1

Dinner in Portomarín last night was Galician pork on a small patio at sunset with Gabriel and Guillermo. They left earlier than I did this morning since they didn't have reservations and needed to find open albergues. I was still up before 7:00 because the dorm room was noisy with snoring and people rustling to leave. I took a wrong turn heading out of Portomarín in the dark but corrected quickly and continued the climb out of town. I stopped at a café for tortilla francesa with cheese (an omelet on bread), a café con leche, and fresh orange juice, which is excellent here. Later in the morning the fog lifted, and the day turned sunny with clear skies.

The Camino passed farms with cows, small villages of stone houses, and stretches of countryside with pine trees, rolling hills, and fields. At one crossroads I met Paul, an older man from Paris, who by coincidence I saw him again this afternoon staying at the same albergue in Palas de Rei.

When I arrived in Palas, I tried pulpo a la gallega (octopus), another Galician specialty. It was good, though not something I'll seek out at home. At the albergue I showered, washed my clothes in the sink, and took a short nap. I'll likely take a short walk around town this evening, but I'm sore from the day's walk.

- Day 5 (Oct 2): Palas de Rei → Arzúa (~29 km)
  - Often stop in Melide, famous for pulpo a la gallega (octopus) and the Romanesque church at Leboreiro.
  - Arzúa is known for its cheese production and nearby Ribadiso hosts a medieval pilgrim hospital.
  - Overnight: Cruce de Caminos Arzúa

Daily Summary — Oct 2

I set out in the morning with Carlos, who had stayed in my hostel. He is from San Miguel de Allende, Mexico. In the next village we stopped for breakfast of scrambled eggs with tomato, onion, and ham, which was excellent and kept me fueled for the walk. Carlos shared that he was walking the Camino because his partner of 19 years passed away from cancer in May. It was something his partner had wanted to do, and Carlos is walking in his memory while thinking about what comes next in life.

We walked together until Melide, where he stopped since he is dividing the Camino into shorter stages due to leg issues. Passing through Melide, I saw many restaurants serving pulpo in different forms—including one advertising pulpo pizza—but I didn't stop since I had already tried pulpo the previous day and it wasn't the right time for a meal. From there I continued with Pedro from Málaga for a while. His English was limited, so we spoke in Spanish, which was a challenge for me but good practice. Later I stopped at a café for fresh orange juice and some ibuprofen. My legs were sore since this was the longest stage.

I finished the day walking with Miriam from Ohio, who has been walking from France for the past 30 days. She shared that she is unsure about returning home because she is re-evaluating her marriage. Many pilgrims seem to be reflecting on big life changes—relationships, careers, and personal direction. The Camino passed through Ribadiso, where I crossed its medieval stone bridge and walked past the riverside albergue, one of the most scenic spots on this stretch.

In the evening I had dinner in an outdoor square with Guillermo, a Turkish American named Volkan I met in the hostel common area, and a group of people Guillermo knew from his hostel. Arzúa is known for its cheese, so we made sure to order a local cheese appetizer to start the meal.

- Day 6 (Oct 3): Arzúa → O Pedrouzo (~19 km)

- En route visit the chapel of Santa Irene and experience the atmosphere of anticipation in O Pedrouzo as pilgrims gather for the final day.
- Overnight: Albergue REM

i Note

Daily Summary — Oct 3

This morning my muscles were stiff and sore, so I started slowly. Many walkers passed me, including Miriam from yesterday. After a few kilometers I stopped for breakfast and saw Guillermo and his friends again before they moved ahead. Fortunately, once my muscles warmed up I was able to walk more comfortably and keep a steady pace.

Much of the walk passed through eucalyptus groves, the tall trees giving shade and their distinct smell carrying on the breeze.

Later I ran into Volkan from yesterday, who was walking with Dee, an Irish woman he had met the day before. We then came across three older women walking together—two cousins from Canada whose husbands had passed away, and one from Australia who said her husband had “decided to be old” and didn’t come along. They had their packs sent ahead and were taking shorter stages, but they walked at a surprisingly fast pace.

I joined Volkan, Dee, and the three women for lunch before we parted ways since we were all staying in different villages that night. I had chorizo and Spanish tortilla, a classic egg and potato dish that is both simple and very tasty.

At the hostel that evening, I discovered Pedro from Málaga in the bed next to mine. Encounters like this are common on the Camino—people’s paths crossing again and again along the way.

- Day 7 (Oct 4): O Pedrouzo → Santiago (~20 km)
  - Highlights include Lavacolla, the traditional cleansing site, Monte do Gozo offering panoramic views of Santiago, and attending the Pilgrim’s Mass featuring the Botafumeiro.
  - Collect Compostela certificate in Santiago.
  - Overnight: Pensión Rua Nova (Rúa Nova, 4, Santiago de Compostela).

Daily Summary — Oct 4

Rain fell steadily throughout the day, but it was my sore left ankle and right knee that slowed my pace. The group I’d been having dinner with started later and eventually overtook me, and we stopped together for a café con leche before parting ways. E

I walked for a while with a German man who had started his Camino in France and later saw him again as I entered Santiago. I also came across a Danish woman I’d met a few days earlier who had also begun in France. For both of them, reaching Santiago was a major moment after weeks on the trail.

I stopped at a restaurant for caldo gallego, a warm Galician soup that was a welcome break from the rain. When I reached Monte do Gozo—the traditional first viewpoint of Santiago—the fog was thick enough that I couldn't see the city below. The final stretch into Santiago wasn't very scenic, following the highway for a while, but entering the old town was something special. Catching the first clear glimpse of the cathedral as I approached was still inspiring.

The main square was filled with pilgrims celebrating the end of their journeys—some, like me, having walked just five days, and others who had been on the road for more than a month.

I checked into a proper hotel at last. The room was small but felt like luxury after the albergues. After a much-needed nap to rest my legs, I explored the old town and cathedral in the evening light.

Dinner was at a tapas restaurant where I had the best scallops I've ever tasted, along with excellent Spanish wine. Later I joined Guillermo from Salamanca, two British men, and three women from the Basque Country for a tapas crawl that took us to several local bars. We stayed out late, in true Spanish fashion. In the early hours of the morning we parted ways. Even though we'd only known each other a few days, the hours walking, talking, and going out in the evenings made it feel like much longer.

Day 8 – Sun Oct 5

- Full day in Santiago.
- Overnight: Pensión Rua Nova (Single room with private bathroom, free Wi-Fi, pedestrian old town location).

Note

Daily Summary — Oct 5

After staying out late the night before, I slept in and took things slowly. The day turned into a cycle of naps and small outings. I went to a laundromat to finally do a proper load of laundry—up to now everything had been washed in hostel sinks and dried on railings or lines. Having a full set of clean clothes again felt like a luxury.

While waiting for the laundry, I stopped at a nearby café for a café con leche, fresh-squeezed orange juice, and an excellent toast layered with tomato, avocado, and egg.

I decided to stay in Santiago for a third night and to visit Finisterre as a day trip instead of an overnight. I wasn't sure I wanted to spend hours on a bus, but several Spanish pilgrims I'd shared drinks with the other night insisted it was worth it. The hotel also recommended a guided tour instead of public transport, which would save time and include more stops along the coast.

I met Carlos from San Miguel de Allende for lunch—he'd arrived a day later because he split the longest stage into two due to leg pain. We discovered we'll be on the same train back to Madrid tomorrow and made plans to have breakfast together before departing. In the afternoon, I wandered through the old town again, toured the cathedral, and picked up my Compostela certificate, the official proof of completing the Camino de Santiago. Later I met up with Volkan, the Turkish American I'd walked with earlier in the week. He had never attended a Catholic Mass—or any Christian service—and was curious, so we went to the Pilgrim's Mass inside the cathedral. It was crowded and standing-room-only, and eventually we slipped out a side door for tapas. Dee from Ireland stopped by briefly; both she and Volkan are heading out tomorrow—she on a direct flight to Ireland from Santiago airport and he by train to Italy before continuing on to visit his parents in Turkey.

Day 9 – Mon Oct 6

- Finisterre, Ézaro & Muxía day tour (Toxo Travel)
  - Planned stops
    - * Muros — fishing village with 15th-century historic quarter, arcades and galleries overlooking the estuary
    - * Ézaro waterfall — River Xallas drops ~40 m directly to the sea
    - * Fisterra Lighthouse & Km 0 — “end of the world” viewpoint over the Corcubión estuary
    - * Finisterre village — free time for old town, port, fish market, and lunch (Galician seafood)
    - * Muxía — Sanctuary of A Barca and the three “sacred stones” on a wild Atlantic point
    - * Ponte Maceira — cobbled hamlet with 14th-century Romanesque bridge and medieval mills
- Return to Santiago by early evening for a relaxed final night in the old town
- Overnight: Hotel Rúa Villar (Santiago).

Day 10 – Tue Oct 7

- Breakfast with Carlos
- 11:48 — Depart Santiago (AVE 04314, Confort, seat 4D, Booking Reference: KYC3XB).

- 14:50 — Arrive Madrid Chamartín.
- Evening tapas crawl in La Latina or Malasaña.
- Overnight: Petit Palace Plaza Mayor

Day 11 – Wed Oct 8

Packing List

Documents & Money

- Passport
- Flight & train tickets (digital copies on phone + 1 printed copy as backup)
- Credit + ATM cards
- Euro cash
- Priority Health card

Pack Setup

- REI Trail 40 backpack with built-in rain cover
- 1 small dry sack (for electronics/passport)
- Plastic bags + a couple lightweight packing cubes (organization, laundry separation)

Clothing

- 2 Patagonia Capilene Cool Daily tees (short-sleeve, quick-dry)
  - Quick dry fabric was a must
- Smartwool Merino 150 Quarter Zip (long-sleeve thermal, doubles as evening shirt)
- Patagonia R1 Air Pullover (light fleece mid-layer)
  - Was the perfect fleece for this trip
- 1 lightweight rain jacket (waterproof, breathable)
- 1 REI Sahara Stretch Convertible Pants (trail use, doubles as shorts)
- 1 Prana Stretch Zion Pants (town/exploring Spain)
- 1 lightweight shorts (backup rotation)
- 3 pairs quick-dry underwear (2 ExOfficio + 1 Smartwool synthetic/merino)
- 3 pairs hiking socks (merino blend)

Footwear

- Altra Lone Peak 9 Trail Running Shoes (primary walking shoes)
    - These shoes were very comfortable and trail running shoes such as this are by far the most common Camino footwear. However, my ankles might have appreciated a bit more support from a light hiking shoe such as a Hoka Speedgoat
  - Xero Shoes Z-Trail EV Sandals (evenings / backup)
    - These are nice light sandals, but simple flip flops would have been sufficient ###
- Toiletries

- Toothbrush + small toothpaste
- Dr. Bronner's Organic Liquid Soap – 2 oz (body + laundry)
- Travel deodorant
- Razor + small shaving cream
- Quick-dry towel (microfiber)
- Sunscreen (50 ml to start; refill in Spain)
- Lip balm with SPF
- Nail clippers

Health & First Aid

- Walgreens blister pads (Compeed-style hydrocolloid)
  - A necessity ... I was able to share with a few others who did not bring
- Ibuprofen / acetaminophen / citalopram / ambien
- Hand sanitizer
- Tissues
- Earplugs + eye mask (for noisy albergues)
- Disposable contact lenses (a few as glasses backup)

Electronics

- iPhone + USB-C cord
- EU Plug adapter
- AirPods
- 13 MacBook Air (with power bank/cord)
  - There were times I'm glad I had this, but it probably was not worth the weight; will reconsider for next time

Other

- Sunglasses
  - Hat
  - Clothesline for drying
    - I didn't end up using as albergues each had either a rail or line to use. But the weight was minimal and it could have come in handy
  - Sleep sack / liner (for albergues)
    - This was nice as albergue bedding sometimes was minimal
  - Nite Ize gear tie 6" x 2 I didn't use, but weight was minimal and could have come in handy
  - 2 x 1 L bottles (Smartwater style — bring 1 from home, buy 1 in Spain)
  - pen
    - more useful than I had thought, Pilgrim credencial requires some writing
